WOODPECKERS FOOL SNYDER IS IN TEARS

"Pecking" of the Birds Is Just Like Park King's Call for Food.

Somehow Rill Snyder will master the situation, but for the present the king of the Central Park birds and beasts is in a bad quandary. It was bad enough when wicked sea-guils from Seabright and other Jersey points coming to New York to see the elephant stayed long enough to devour Bill's goldfish in the Fiftyninth Street lakelet. All he had to do was to raise a squad of leather-lunged old men who fleroely yelled "Bhoo!"

But now the woodpeckers have the buffaloes locoed, and Bill is distracted. The law won't let him shoot or even swear at a woodpecker. His ouffaloes are developing cases of Newyorkitis. The woodpeckers are aughing in their bills.

Snyder has long been in the habit of tapping the tree nearest to the corral with a heavy stick whenever he has hay or peanuts to give away. Thereupon the sixteen buffaloes have leaped from the ground where they were ewing the cud of old tradition and shed up to the fence and received Bill's bounty. Whether the woodocker is a practical joker or whether he worms and grubs in the trees are unusually plentiful and julcy this spring Bill does not know, but the not is that the birds are drumming seed and fast many times a day.

The snoosing bufafloes leap and dash across the corral with loud cries of "Hay!" (in the buffalo tongue), only to find that there is no hay. They bump into one another, they clack horns and ruffle bisonian tampers. This it is that almost moves bill to tears.
